Abstract The purpose of the present study was to determine the prevalence of pain in young persons in foster care. The specific aims were to describe the prevalence of pain, a specific type of chronic pain; identify the relationships between pain and internalizing and externalizing behaviors; and explore the relations among risk factors for youth in foster care. Data were collected by using the Child Assessment Schedule-Revised. All foster youth (N = 142) were assessed and classified into three age groups: 4-10 years (N = 57), 11-14 years (N = 51), and 15-17 years (N = 34). The prevalence of pain was found to be highest among the 15-17-year-old youth and there was a significant age effect. The prevalence of a type of chronic pain was higher among the older youth and among youth with internalizing problems. The prevalence of behavioral pain among the older youth increased and the prevalence of somatic pain decreased when the internalizing and externalizing behaviors were examined. This study is the first to identify a subset of youth in foster care who report internalizing and externalizing behaviors that may be related to pain.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a gas detection system capable of detecting a gas that had entered into an IC valve, and a valve driving apparatus using such a gas detection system. 2. Description of the Prior Art In a vacuum processing system in which a gas is introduced into a vacuum chamber, a gas detection system is used to detect the presence or absence of a gas in the chamber. The gas detection system includes a sensor for detecting the presence or absence of a gas in the vacuum chamber, and an output circuit for outputting detection signals from the sensor. Conventionally, a vacuum chamber is used in a semiconductor manufacturing process in which a wafer is introduced into a vacuum chamber and a vacuum processing is performed on the wafer under a reduced pressure.
