Q: Is it possible to customize the iOS PlayerItem.js file? I am building a iOS app using the Ionic framework and Clouinary. I have uploaded the iPhone 7 simulator images to the Clouinary account and run the build to my server, and it looks good on the simulator. However, when it comes time to run the build on device, it doesn't look good. Is it possible to modify the file within the playeritem directory, or some other file, to fix this?

A: Yes, you can specify the resolutions you want the video player to render at: By default, the player will default to rendering only at the resolution that the device renders at. Your code can check the device's actual resolution using the `window.device.system.pixelRatio` property:

this.pixelRatio = window.device.system.pixelRatio;

As you can see, the property holds the actual pixel ratio of the device being used. Now if you use the NgCordova/Ionic architecture you can override the resolution of the video player with this attribute: This will render the video player to 300x300 at 30
