Indian authorities moved to lockdown the region, a crucial part of the country's political and security infrastructure that houses many of the country's strategic assets, after the killing of rebels, which they blamed on militants. But instead of halting the violence, the lockdown turned into a huge security build-up, bringing the region to a standstill in an early warning about a potential national security crisis. Reuters spoke to army, police and government officials to get an inside view of the situation in the region and find out why the outcome has been so different from what Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi had promised. Reuters also visited some of the most tense parts of the state and spoke with politicians, local residents and government officials to find out the causes and solutions to India's worst security crisis since independence from Britain in 1947. Here is how a key part of the country's administration was brought to a standstill during a crucial time in India's current national security

53 per cent to 47 per cent. This was a slight revision of the previous result: the previous poll had the Coalition leading 54 per cent to 46 per cent. These results are based on a sample of 35,348 voters and have a margin of error of 0.5 per cent. The poll was conducted between August 5 and August 8. The Liberals and Labor still appear to be in a dead heat with 46 per cent of the vote each, with the Greens a poor third at nine per cent. One Nation and the Shooters, Fishers and Farmers are in line to get five per cent of the vote each. Labor held on to the seat of Fisher, Labor's sole seat, in Melbourne's north-east, and held onto some other marginal seats that it had won by a tiny margin in 2016, but these gains appear to be coming at a cost. Labor has lost its majority in the Western Australian seat of Canning, which had long been held by the former speaker Don Randall, and Labor has lost its majority in the seat of Bowman. The Liberal/National Coalition has picked up 51 seats, while Labor has lost 19 seats. Labor's result has kept it well-placed to make gains in seats where the Coalition suffered a serious reversal in 2016, such as Wentworth. Labor also looks to have held on to the two New South Wales seats of Prospect and Blue Mountains and also to have won the inner-Melbourne seat of Wills. These results indicate that the Coalition will not make any significant
