(Reuters) - At a cost of around $150,000 to build, copy and distribute the virus, the Gozi computer worm could be a tempting option for hackers and cyber criminals. Each time you turn on your computer in a day, it makes a separate copy of the whole system. Yandex promises to protect you from the consequences of this action by detecting your computer if it seems to be infected with the virus. The virus has been discovered and the necessary procedure should be implemented. In the case of a computer infected with the virus, the main interface will be black, and a black bar with a orange inscription will be visible at the top-left of the computer screen. Yandex, the search engine, warns that following the advice provided to the victims of the virus will not help if the virus is not removed. To remove the virus, a program is needed to destroy the remnants of the virus. The Gozi virus was discovered on February 20 at the Yandex forum. According to experts, the virus had been on the market for about 10 years. At that time it was not detected as dangerous for the computer and the user. In 2009 it was discovered that virus can destroy personal and financial information stored in your computer's hard drive. The virus was created by cyber criminals and its purpose was to earn money, which was offered to people who spread it around. In 2010, the virus turned into the most dangerous one in the history of computers. In 2011 the first antivirus software was created, which perfectly detected the virus. Its creators were suspected of creating the virus for financial purposes, for example the c6a93da74d
